TCOE Tech Rodeo

TCOE EdTech Integration Department is excited to announce its 2nd Annual Tech Rodeo, a full day of EdTech learning for educators and administrators, across all grade levels, subject areas, and devices. This dynamic learning experience includes inspirational keynote speakers, robotics exhibition corral, and hands-on interactive sessions.

Come hear from the authors of Launch and stay for deeper learning in their sessions.

John Spencer spent 12 years as an urban middle school teacher and is now a full-time professor of Educational Technology and a leader in creativity, design thinking, and student engagement. John has a goal of making something new each day. He is the co-founder of two educational startups and the co-author of a top-selling children's book.

A.J. Juliani is a leading educator in the area of innovation, design thinking, and inquiry-based learning. Juliani has worked as a middle and high school English teacher, a K-12 technology staff developer, and is currently an administrator for a public school district with the title: education and technology innovation specialist.

"It was a fantastic event! I was concerned that an Old Lady kindergarten teacher might be out of place. And I found many teachers at my level. I learned so much that I will take back to class."

-- Pam Schmidt

"This past weekend I had the opportunity to be a part of something that wasn't only a great day of inspiring learning, but an important step forward in creating a better experience for kids across an entire region."

-- Brian Costello
